

How replace exchange with solidarity?

Strategy Note 270 said we need to eliminate exchange. How?

We don't need fundamentally new kinds of economic relationships. We just need to expand our solidarity relationships to include everybody. As that expansion happens, we will no longer need exchange relationships.

Replacing exchange with solidarity will create a big change. It will make more difference in our lives than did the industrial revolution or possibly our development of agriculture.

We humans make big changes in the way we live. We make big changes quite often in comparison with other species. Now we get to make another big change.

We have four tasks during this change:

- Renovate some of our infrastructure to better suit our new relationships.
- Replace our exchange-based assumptions and customs with ones suiting our expanded solidarity relationships.
- Develop a coordinating system to replace "invisible hand" coordination via prices.
- Defeat lingering attempts to enforce the exchange system.

We should not underestimate the difficulty of these tasks but we also shouldn't overestimate their difficulty. Nothing in logic or the laws of nature prevents them. The next Strategy Notes describe approaches to each task.

How replace exchange with solidarity?

Strategy Note 270 said we need to eliminate exchange. How?

We don't need fundamentally new kinds of economic relationships. We just need to expand our solidarity relationships to include everybody. As that expansion happens, we will no longer need exchange relationships.

Replacing exchange with solidarity will create a big change. It will make more difference in our lives than did the industrial revolution or possibly our development of agriculture.

We humans make big changes in the way we live. We make big changes quite often in comparison with other species. Now we get to make another big change.

We have four tasks during this change:

- Renovate some of our infrastructure to better suit our new relationships.
- Replace our exchange-based assumptions and customs with ones suiting our expanded solidarity relationships.
- Develop a coordinating system to replace "invisible hand" coordination via prices.
- Defeat lingering attempts to enforce the exchange system.

We should not underestimate the difficulty of these tasks but we also shouldn't overestimate their difficulty. Nothing in logic or the laws of nature prevents them. The next Strategy Notes describe approaches to each task.

