

How defeat enforcement of exchange?

The property-exchange regime causes fear of scarcity and interprets any reduction in personal wealth as threatening starvation. Some current owners will fear our replacement of exchange with solidarity. Some will try to enforce exchange relationships.

Confusion caused by fear can cause people to act viciously. We must prepare to handle violent attacks while we replace exchange relationships with solidarity relationships.

We will handle attacks on two levels simultaneously:

- Emotional: Reduce fear. Avoid stoking fear. Welcome everybody (explicitly including former owners and those who served them as enforcers) to our solidarity economy. Rejecting punishment of our opponents makes it easier for them to defect.
- Practical: Expand our solidarity relationships. As rapidly as feasible withdraw cooperation from the exchange economy.

Withdrawing cooperation works democratically. As long as some people want exchange relationships, they can use them. As more and more people agree with us, exchange's remaining adherents will find it difficult to require others to rely on the dwindling exchange economy.

Nonviolent noncooperation does not solve everything magically. Enforcers of exchange will likely kill many people. But they already do that. Withdrawing our cooperation from them and building our solidarity economy hastens the end of killing for exchange.

How defeat enforcement of exchange?

The property-exchange regime causes fear of scarcity and interprets any reduction in personal wealth as threatening starvation. Some current owners will fear our replacement of exchange with solidarity. Some will try to enforce exchange relationships.

Confusion caused by fear can cause people to act viciously. We must prepare to handle violent attacks while we replace exchange relationships with solidarity relationships.

We will handle attacks on two levels simultaneously:

- Emotional: Reduce fear. Avoid stoking fear. Welcome everybody (explicitly including former owners and those who served them as enforcers) to our solidarity economy. Rejecting punishment of our opponents makes it easier for them to defect.
- Practical: Expand our solidarity relationships. As rapidly as feasible withdraw cooperation from the exchange economy.

Withdrawing cooperation works democratically. As long as some people want exchange relationships, they can use them. As more and more people agree with us, exchange's remaining adherents will find it difficult to require others to rely on the dwindling exchange economy.

Nonviolent noncooperation does not solve everything magically. Enforcers of exchange will likely kill many people. But they already do that. Withdrawing our cooperation from them and building our solidarity economy hastens the end of killing for exchange.

